young lad named Ford fell in convulsions on the street, and, when carried to the Central Station and resuscitated, claimed that he had been poisoned by the owner of the race-horse at some point in Missouri which he had ridden last week. The boy is well known as a race-horse rider here and in Colorado. He has raved a good deal rince the race, but says he was told to lose the race last Saturday, but the horse he was riding ran away with him and won. Afterward the owner gave him a bottle of liniment and told him to rub the horse's leg and drink what was left, and he did so. He was immediately taken sick, but, being placed on the car, managed to reach home. The doctors say he cannot recover, and his symptoms show he has taken beleadonna."
